

SYNOPSIS

BELOVED HOMELAND, BRAZIL!

Wescley Santos is a champion sprinter who is about to go to his first Olympiad. Knowing that the Brazilian super-athlete will win at least one gold medal, Marcinho Kaufmann, director of the Brazilian Olympic Committee, force him to train the national anthem. To his surprise, Wescley realizes that he cannot sing the anthem, suffering from a visible emotional block. And to make things worse, as it is already certain that he will win at least one gold medal, Wescley is invited to go to the Planalto's Palace to sing the anthem for the President of the Republic. Keeping his problem in secret, and in the anguish of wanting to solve it as fast as possible, he asks for help from his diarist Shirley. When things are expected to improve, the troubles generated by Shirley only make the situation even more complicated.
